OBECOM - Introduction

- The measurement of exhaust emissions in real environments is an important topic for the development of powertrains
- Portable Emission Measurement Systems (PEMS) have a high purchase price and operating costs (calibration, maintenance, servicing, ...)
 - → Too expensive for use in the fleet or for long-term testing (ageing assessment)
- Sensors currently used in the exhaust tract of vehicles:
 - Lambda sensor (air-fuel-ratio)
 - NO_x sensor (Stickoxide)
 - Temperature sensors
 - Pressure sensors
- → Only possible to a limited extent to detect aged components in the waste after-treatment system

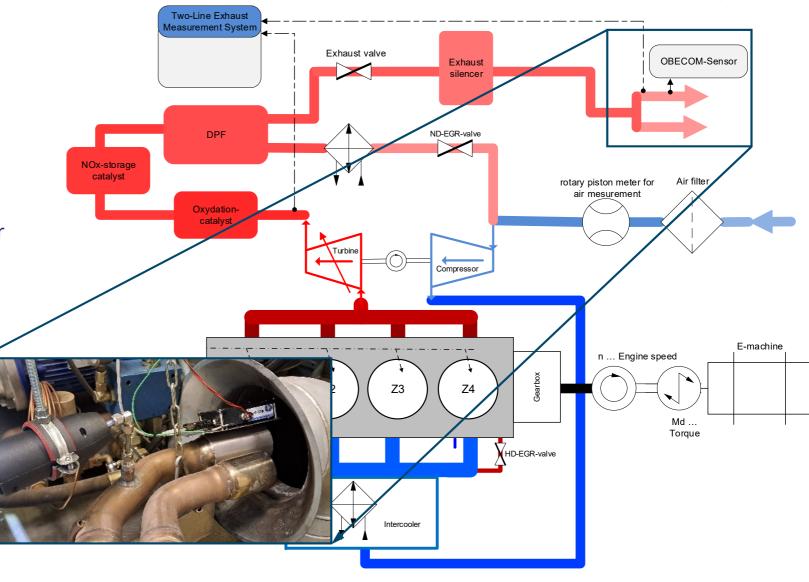

OBECOM - Introduction

- A prototype of a miniature sensor has been developed to enable the measurement of entire fleets on the road using cost-effective means
 → 10cm x 6cm x 2cm (LxWxH)
- Sensor configuration:
 - Non-dispersive infrared sensor (NDIR) for detecting CO₂
 - 2 Triple MOx (metal oxide) sensor for the detection of CO, HC, NH₃, H₂O, NO and NO₂
- Task of the project partners:
 - Sensor tests → Analyse sensor weak points → Further development of the sensor
 - Development of a calculation routine for analysing the raw sensor data
- Difficulty: Strong cross-influences

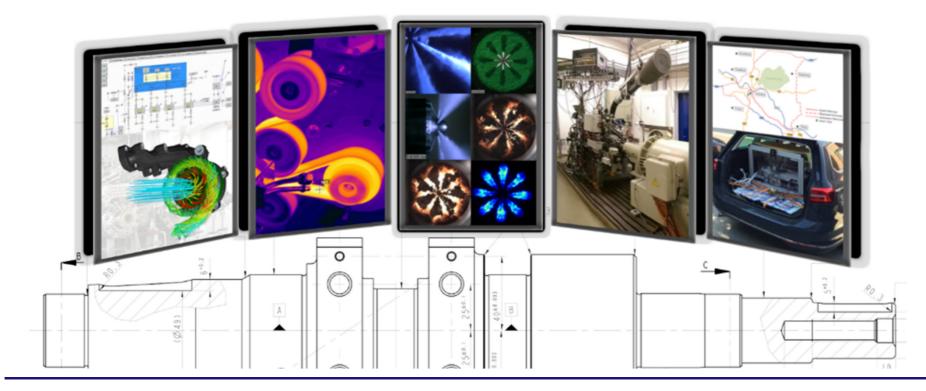

OBECOM - Table of contents

- Summary

OBECOM - Results

- Extract from the results of the project:
 Results of the tests on the diesel engine test bench
- OBECOM-Sensor has a very high reaction speed
 → course of the calculated CO₂ values from the OBECOM NDIR is nearly identical to the AMA
- Low oxygen content in the exhaust gas of the petrol engine impairs the function of the OBECOM sensor
 - → Using the results from the diesel engine test bench, initial emission calculations could be made

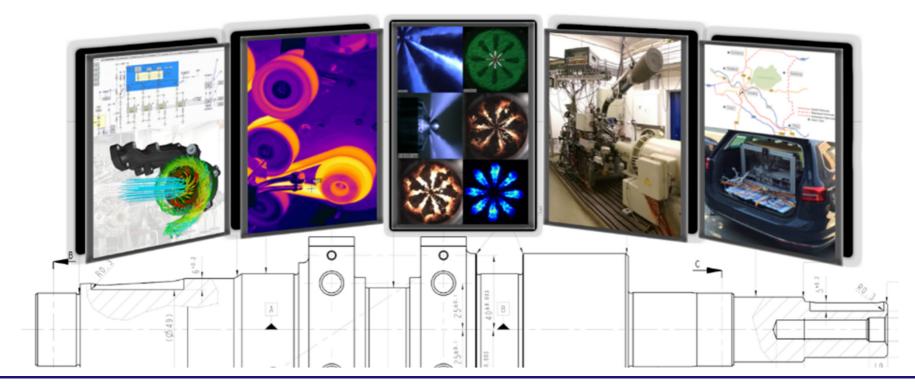

OBECOM - Table of contents

- Introduction
- Project structure
- Project process
- Results
- Summary

OBECOM - Summary

- Thanks to the excellent cooperation between the German and Mexican institutes, it was possible to develop an initial sensor prototype
- Together, a wide range of examination options could be provided and utilized
 - Diesel engine → Chair of Internal Combustion Engines and Powertrain Systems
 - Gasoline engine → Karlsruher Institute of Technology
 - Vehicle investigations (RDE) → Tecnologico de Montery
- The foundations for sensor data analysis have been laid → A follow-up project is planned
 → the good cooperation will also be demonstrated in a presentation of the results at the FVV spring conference
